Please be patient...

I've received requests to make some changes to my blog and website. There are several features that can't be added using my current web hosting. During the next few days you may have some problems accessing my website and blog. My old blog posts may also reappear on your reader as new. This is because I am shifting hosting from Microsoft to Linux. This is being done because:

- There are several things I want to do with my site and blog to add features you have requested. I can't implement several features with the Microsoft hosting. Most of this is due to a lack of support for several scripting languages.
- It will allow me to use Wordpress which is a more capable Blog platform than Blogger. This should allow me to better integrate the website and blog providing you a more seamless experience.
- I use XSitePro for 90% of my web development activities. They are coming out with a new version in a week or so. I will be able to use more of the features with a Linux platform.

Bottom line is that this should improve the quality of my blog and website.
